As it can be seen from Figure 1, the overall retrieval rates for the 2,750 samples, as of April 2017, is pretty good. The discovery rate for Google Scholar is reaching a 95% ratio and the full-text retrieval rates for both Sci-Hub and LibGen are respectively 69% and 68%. This is not what one would have probably expected considering the breadth of the disciplines covered in this study. The majority of samples discovered in GS were done by article title (99.6%) and a very small proportion by DOI (0.4%). On the other hand, Sci-Hub and LibGen samples were mainly retrieved by article title (88% and 89% respectively) with a higher proportion than GS through DOI (12% for Sci-Hub and 11% for LibGen). Some samples were retrieved by the PubMed Central reference number (PMCID) in both Sci-Hub (0.4%) and LibGen (0.1%).
